Tour Oakland's Catholic Cathedral of Christ the Light, a dramatic glass structure that has reshaped Oakland's skyline, and the Greek Orthodox Cathedral of the Ascension, built in the centuries-old Byzantine traditions while using material, design and engineering of the present day.

The most expensive cathedral in American history, the Cathedral of Christ the Light is a glowing, luminous space that takes advantage of natural light, requiring illumination only at night. As the sun moves across the building, the light constantly changes, reminding us that God is in us and around us at all times.

At the Greek Orthodox Cathedral, a docent will explain the differences between Western and Eastern Christianity and the traditions of the orthodox church.

The church design incorporates an equal sided cross capped by a dome. The vertical axis represents the creation of Heaven and Earth, and the horizontal, darkness and light. The East, from which the light rises, symbolizes Christ, the Light of the World.
